How to Manage a Camel – Project Management and Recruitment

The project management and recruitment blog from Arras People

Launch of free training for the unemployed Project Manager

Posted on | September 1, 2009 | Author: | lindsayascott | No Comments

ESI's Stand Out Scholarship has been launched today, £250,000 in career development learning funds are available for out of work project managers, business analysts and general business professionals.

ESI's SOS tuition assistance can make it easier for you to enhance project management and business analysis skills and build a more competitive resume that stands out; so you can continue building your career. ESI courses available through the scholarship programme are offered via ESI public classrooms in the United Kingdom, Sweden, Germany, Switzerland and Spain or convenient e-Training platforms, and curriculum paths include:

- Project Management
- Programme Management
- Business Analysis
- Business Skills

As a global leader in professional development learning, ESI wants to make sure our programmes remain financially accessible to you, even while you're not working.

Click through to the website to find out more information about how you can access the scholarship.

It's great that an organisation like ESI is also thinking about the unemployment levels in the UK at the moment, and if you're currently an unemployed project manager I hope you are able to access some of these funds to enhance your career whilst you search for that next opportunity

ESI is also celebrating its 10th year anniversary of operations in the UK and has also launched its 10 Year Old Pricing on its popular project management courses, see the website for more information

ESI also is honouring ESI training veteran Iain McPhail, one of the first project managers to take a course with ESI in the UK in 1999. McPhail, who just completed his 18th course with ESI is currently a programme manager with Hitachi Data Systems. “I am now PMP certified and need PDU’s to maintain my certification. ESI courses combine training and PDU’s providing greater justification for the training budget,” said McPhail. “Another benefit of ESI is the range of courses from project management to programme management, business skills and business analysis allowing me to refine my knowledge.”
